UNO student selected to search committee

BY PATRICK RUNGE

The University of Nebraska Board of Regents appointed 10 members Saturday to the presidential search committee.

The committee will review and recommend to the board presidential nominees for the NU system. The committee consists of six members from the general public, three faculty members, one student member, one University foundation member and one NU alumnus.

Each voting regent was allowed to submit two names for the general public positions on the committee.

At the meeting, UNO Student President/Regent Paula Effle expressed concern over parts of the selection process.

"I'm uncomfortable with this, and I would appreciate some information on why the regents appointed who they did," Effle said.

Board of REGENTS

"There doesn't have to be a reason why we nominated who we did," Board Chairwoman Nancy Hoch said. "They are all exceptional people. Their resumes speak for themselves."

The appointees for the at-large seats were as follows: Duane Acklie, Eugene Mahoney, Lee Ellen Matzke, Emil Reutzel Jr., James Roberts and Jan Thayer.

"We did achieve some geographical representation," Regent Don Blank said, noting the representatives are from around the state.

"There is one Lincoln resident, three with UNL ties, one with Med Center ties and no one with UNO ties," Effle said. "I strongly recommend that a UNO student be selected for the board."

The student representative chosen was Allison Brown-Corson from UNO.

Three faculty members were chosen, one from each campus: B.J. Reed from UNO, Michael Sorrell from the Medical Center and Robert Fuller from UNL.

The alumni representative is a non-voting member of the committee, serving only as an adviser. An affirmative-action member and an administrative member will also serve as

Payne moves to scrap search, appoint Massengale

BY PATRICK RUNGE

An attempt to name Martin Massengale permanent president of the University of Nebraska system was made at the Board of Regents' meeting Oct. 6.

Regent John Payne introduced a resolution that would name Massengale permanent president and appoint a search committee to find a new University of Nebraska-Lincoln chancellor, the post Massengale now holds.

The regents appointed Massengale interim president after they removed Ronald Roskens from office last July.

Payne's motion was tabled by the regents for consideration at their next meeting in November.

"I think you're wasting a pile of bucks on this thing," Payne told the other regents, referring to the cost of the presidential search committee.

"If we're going to horse around for a year and expect him (Massengale) to fill two positions, I think that's very unfair," Payne said.

Board Chairwoman Nancy Hoch said the board would take Payne's comments "under advisement."

"I understand your reasoning," Hoch told Payne. "I would ask that we talk about this in the Executive Committee meeting."

Hoch said the board has made a commitment to a national search. "And we intend to carry it out," she added.

Payne said the regents conducted a nationwide search for a UNL chancellor in 1981, and found the best candidate, Massengale, came from within the NU system.

"I think we've got one of the top administrative staffs in the country right here," Payne said. "You could save $100,000, name him (Massengale) president and go on with a search for the chancellor's position in Lincoln."

Regent Margaret Robinson said the nationwide presidential search could cost nearly $500,000. She said the board should consider putting a spending limit on the cost for the presidential search, which includes specialists' fees.

advisers.

In other business, the regents approved the establishment of the UNO Aviation Institute.

The institute will provide degree programs in such fields as aviation management, aircraft piloting, airway computer science and aviation marketing.

The institute would originally work within UNO's existing degree programs, attaining degree-granting status after a proven record of performance.

The regents also reaffirmed their policy on abortion adopted in 1979.

The resolution passed by the regents cites the Webster v. Reproductive Health Services decision handed down by the U.S. Supreme Court last summer. The decision allows states greater latitude in restricting abortions. The regents said the university has a policy which "favors natural childbirth over non-therapeutic abortions and permits therapeutic pregnancy terminations."

The regents also unanimously approved the establishment of a UNO/Medical Center cooperative degree in biotechnology.

"The synergy that is demonstrated in the cooperative bachelor of science degree between UNO and UNMC is the kind of thing that we ought to strive for more and more throughout the university," said Martin Massengale, interim president of the NU system and chancellor of UNL.

Other actions taken by the Board of Regents included:

- An update on the Campus Academic Computing Plans.
- A proposal to establish guidelines for planning and approving construction projects.
- Approval of a proposal to add five floors to the Eppley Institute Hall of Science at the Medical Center.
- Approval of the Need Statement for a new hazardous waste storage building at the Medical Center.

Sears supports funding student organizations

BY GREG KOZOL

Kelli Sears said she will have no trouble deciding which issue to address first if elected student president/regent.

Sears, who announced her candidacy last week, said her top priority would be a return to the practice of allocating contingency funds to student organizations.

In August, University of Nebraska Assistant General Counsel John Wiltse recommended the Student Senate should not continue allocating funds to student organizations.

As reported in the Gateway, Wiltse based his decision on the regents' policy which governs the use of University Program and Facility Fees.

Student ELECTIONS

"Student organizations need that money," Sears said. "Right now, they are paying money out of their own pockets."

At the next Student Senate meeting Oct. 12, the senate will discuss several proposals for funding student organizations.

Sears, a student senator since 1987, said rather than debating a proposal in the senate, the president/regent should submit a funding proposal directly to the Board of Regents.

"We would have to go through the Board of Regents for a policy change anyway," she said.

A direct proposal to the regents would speed up the allocation of contingency funds to student organizations, Sears said.

"If we (the Student Senate) change it, it would not go into effect until July," she said. "I don't want to see that happen."

Although she has not developed a funding proposal, Sears said she knows how to approach the regents.

"It still needs to be worked on," Sears said. "But I would definitely not make a decision without consulting student organization representatives."

— Dave Weaver

Kelli Sears is the only announced candidate for student president/regent so far.

Sears also said a large group of supporters at a Board of Regents meeting would give her proposal greater credibility.

"They (the regents) would see all the people and say 'Whoa, maybe this does matter,'" Sears said.

Sears said dealing with the regents is a task she cannot handle by herself.

"One student can't do it all on his or her own," she said. "To be effective, you've got to take 200 people down to the regents meeting, show them they're here and show them they care."

Sears said UNO students' lack of involvement in Student Government has made it difficult for current President/Regent Paula Effle to deal with the regents.

"They (students) haven't gone to show support in Lincoln since the athletic budget was in danger of being cut in 1985," Sears said.

Part of the student president/regent's job should be to make students interested in Student Government, she said.

"It is hard to expect people to know what is going on in Student Government," Sears said. "Communication is the key."

Sears, a junior business administration major, said her current post as chairwoman of the Student Senate's Student Affairs Subcommittee has allowed her to see the students' needs.

"I have an open door policy," Sears said. "I like to walk around and get the opinions of other students."

"The Student Senate should be reaching out more, because on a commuter campus, a lot of people will just get in their cars and leave," she said.

Aside from dealing with the student body, Sears said the student president/regent must be prepared to work with the regents and the Student Senate.

"The first thing is to develop a good rapport with the Board of Regents," Sears said.

But building effective relations with the regents can be tricky, she said.

"They are scared of UNO," she said. "UNO has a lot of potential."

The student president/regent's relationship with the Student Senate is also important, Sears said.

"It has gotten better, but I think it can be done better," Sears said.

"If I get elected, it is not going to be on how the senate and I communicate," she said.

Sears said she realizes the president/regent cannot always please the students, the Student Senate and the regents.

"You've got to find that compromise," Sears said. "And I will try my damndest to find it."

Kittleson a victim, university should apologize

Assuming the events of the Kittleson/McCartney conflict have been accurately represented in John Watson's story ("Cap controversy opens classroom discipline debate," Gateway Oct. 3), I believe that Kittleson was victimized.

Let me first cite the cogent sections of the bylaws of the Board of Regents of the University of Nebraska. In section five, titled the Responsibilities and Rights of Students, segment 5.0 states the following: "Students, like all members of the academic community, have the responsibility to create and support an educational environment. Each member of the community should be treated with respect and dignity. Each has the right to learn. This right imposes a duty not to infringe upon the rights of others. The academic community should assure its members those opportunities, protections, and privileges that provide the best climate for learning."

Additionally, I cite the relevant parts of 4.1 from the from fear, from violence, and from personal abuse; and (4) the right of the University community to be free from actions that impede its normal functioning... (c) To establish and maintain a classroom or laboratory atmosphere that encourages free inquiry and the free expression of ideas by students."

I believe it takes an exquisite torturing of the bylaws to interpret the wearing of a hat in a classroom as the business of the instructor. If, of course, the hat is of such gargantuan proportions that it impedes the line of sight of other students to the instructor or the chalkboard, the bylaws might be operative, for the rights of others might then be infringed. However, I see no such claims by the instructor. The quote attributed to McCartney by Watson says that it isn't the best thing in the world to be wearing a baseball cap in a senior/graduate level course. It certainly doesn't count among the worst things in the world either. On a scale in which plutonium contamination is worst and falling in love is best, wearing a hat to class is in the realm of a flirtation, McCartney, it is further reported, says that "A senior in college... must realize a person's attire is important. I am trying to prepare him to get a job." If the class Kittleson had been attending had been called Dressing For Success — Wardrobe Practice Lab, then there would be no issue. But an irrelevant standard has been introduced into a public relations class.

The issue seems to be this. McCartney is imposing his personal notion of a dress code on Kittleson who simply asks to be left alone. If anyone is contributing to impeding the normal functioning of the classroom, if anyone is assaulting the dignity of another, it doesn't seem to be Kittleson. There was an era, which ended more than 20 years ago, in this university when women were not allowed to enter the library unless they were wearing a skirt or dress. During that same era, an enforcer circulated in the restaurants of the student center admonishing the students to behave like ladies and gentlemen, to keep their text books off the tables, and to generally refrain from any activity which might mark them as students. I am led to believe that we ended the role of the University as arbiter of etiquette and dress.

The issue raised by Watson's story is not the issue he sees, which is how far can an instructor go in disciplining a student. The issue is not a matter of degrees. The issue is whether the instructor has the right to comment on and make demands about student actions or dress or whatever which do not interfere with the rights of others to educate and learn. I am disappointed by the comments of administrators and others in the article who looked past the substance of the issue and seemed to generalize about any and all student/faculty conflicts by recommending obedience by the student followed by mediation. Where do the bylaws state that an instructor's orders take precedence over a student's rights? I don't believe an instructor's rights enable him to encroach on areas outside the educational mission, and I believe that a student has the right to resist such encroachments.

I personally find hats attractive. Do I have the right to demand that my students all wear hats to class? We all know the answer to that. Kittleson deserves an apology from the university, and he probably made a wise decision in choosing his baseball cap over McCartney's lecture.

Is Regent John Payne working undercover?

"A Spy in Varner Hall" starring John Payne
Filmed in Breathtaking Regentsvision®
A Flagship Production

Coming soon to a campus near you.

Just when you thought there couldn't ever be another Board of Regents editorial, the board provides the Gateway with another opportunity.

During Friday's board meeting, Regent John Payne introduced a resolution to scrap the NU presidential search and just hand over the reigns to Interim President Martin Massengale, chancellor of the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

Citing the waste of a "pile of bucks," Payne suggested the focus of the search be moved to filling the position of the UNL chancellor.

Catching the other board members somewhat off guard with his proposal, the resolution was tabled for further discussion.

What are you up to, John?

First you vote against the removal of President Ronald Roskens, then against the appointment of Massengale as interim president. What's going on?

Staff EDITORIAL

Never afraid to step out on a limb with our saw collection, here's what we think is Payne's reasoning behind such a brash move.

Payne must know the following section of the Bylaws of the Board of Regents by heart. Section 2.1.b allows for the appointment of a search committee to assist the selecting officer in the search for suitable candidates, which are presented to the board. The regents would then choose a president.

Payne is such a kiddier. He knows the regents can't appoint a president without a search committee and a search.

Can you think of a more perfect way to flush out those regents who would prefer to skip the presidential search in favor of their pal Massengale?

It almost worked. We, the public, had but a brief glimpse at the inner workings of the board before it responsibly voted to table the resolution.

In all seriousness, we can hope the Board of Regents will spend the time and money to conduct a thorough, national search for the NU president.

Think of what a great movie it would make.

Labels are only marks on a piece of paper

Have you given much thought to labels lately?

No, no — not soup labels or spaghetti labels. I'm talking about words that tend to define the borders of our being: black, white, rich, poor. ...

Last week's column on the influence of social groups got me thinking about other factors that may influence how we perceive ourselves (I'm afraid I'm in one of my philosophical periods).

Labels seem to be high on the list of such factors.

It's one thing to be labeled by other people. But when we let labels determine what we believe, and even how we behave, we risk giving up a little more of our individual identity.

You don't have much say about whether you are rich or poor — at least at the present time. But other labels sometimes bind us almost as tightly as our economic status or the color of our skin.

Since we will soon have campus elections, let's consider some political labels: liberal and conservative, left and right.

Just about anyone you ask will line up behind one of these banners.

And we're talking about mere words, ladies and gentlemen — sound waves, marks on a piece of paper. And you can't even depend on them to have a constant meaning.

According to the Oxford English Dictionary, the term liberal once referred primarily to activities "suitable to persons of superior social station."

Do you think George Bush was referring to Michael Dukakis' social station when he associated him with the "L" word?

I don't think so.

What about left versus right?

Since France celebrated the 200th anniversary of the fall of the Bastille this past July, they can also give themselves credit for ushering in the political connotation of left and right.

In the era of the French Revolution, representatives of the ancient regime, the nobles and clergy, sat on the right side of the National Assembly. The bourgeois and other advocates of social change sat on the left.

When the extreme faction on the left took control, they started a new calendar and a new church. They also relieved many people of their heads.

Any Democrats out there ready to break out the guillotine?

In spite of the varying extremes, liberals often align themselves with social change while conservatives support the status quo.

But once the liberals get what they want, the change becomes the new status quo. Does that make the supporters of the implemented change into conservatives?

Take abortion, for example. The liberals got what they wanted with the Roe versus Wade Supreme Court decision. Abortion opponents are now the ones advocating a change. Does that mean they are now the liberals?

Confused?

Good. So am I.

I guess I'm trying to show that labels don't always provide a reliable benchmark for political orientation. Why not consider each issue on its individual merits, your own conscience and common sense?

During my time as a military officer, I labeled myself a conservative — only slightly to the left of Atilla the Hun.

In many ways, I still identify with "conservative" causes. I believe we need a strong national defense. All things being equal (I know, they're not), I believe people should take responsibility for their own well-being — not depend on the government to care for them "from cradle to grave."

I generally believe that less government is better than more. But there's this environmental problem.

It truly disturbs me that we are destroying this planet in the name of "progress." Does that make me a (perish the thought) liberal?

Naw.

travel expenses and paid support services.

"I don't want to end up being Auntie Scrooge," Robinson said. "On the other hand, I don't feel that we should feel this is an open-ended invitation for this to go on in expenses ad infinitum."

"I think there has to be a limit on what we are committing the people of this state to, and I think they have a right to know what it is," Robinson said.

After the meeting, Payne said he does have support for his proposal from other board members.

"I'm not at liberty to name them right now," Payne said. "More than two, but time will tell."

Payne said Massengale has been a "very credible interim president."

"I do believe he should be named the permanent president and we should get on with the search to take his position," Payne said.

Payne added that Massengale has received prestigious job offers from universities across the nation. "That speaks for itself," Payne said. "He is a very qualified person, we have him in the state, and I think we can save a considerable amount of money by naming him president."

Massengale said he appreciated Payne's comments, but said the university should conduct a nationwide presidential search.

"I believe that it is in the best interest of all concerned that we have a full, open search nationwide where everyone is given a chance to compete equally for the position," Massengale said, adding that he had not decided whether he would even consider being a contender for the permanent office of president.

Payne said he did not find any problems with appointing a new president from within the NU system, noting that when the regents appointed Roskens president in 1977, Roskens was chancellor of UNO.

Payne said Massengale's appointment as president may improve relations between the board and the Legislature.

"I don't think it's a secret that the Board of Regents has a credibility problem with the Legislature," Payne said. "Chancellor Massengale is very highly respected in the Legislature, and I think that it might help start mending the fences with the Legislature and the university."

UNO student selected to search committee

By PATRICK RUNGE

Although UNO has progressed substantially as a comprehensive urban campus, the University of Nebraska-Lincoln should serve as the "flagship" campus of the NU system, according to a recent university-wide survey.

The survey assessed the internal structure of the NU system. A summary of the survey results was submitted by Regent Don Blank to the Board of Regents Oct. 6.

"The questionnaires were intended to find out if there was a consensus that there were any major problems that should preclude the search (for a permanent president of the NU system)," Blank said.

Those surveyed included the Board of Regents, the three campus's faculty presidents, alumni representatives and the chancellors of UNO and the University of Nebraska Medical Center.

Blank said responses are still being analyzed and some questionnaires are still being returned.

The survey asked the following questions:

Where are we today as an institution?

Blank said a clear consensus exists that the NU system is at a critical juncture in its history, and actions taken now will affect the university for many years.

"All agreed the resources of the state are limited, and a key role of the board is to develop policies that most wisely use those resources," Blank said.

He said there is agreement that the university will continue to be a multi-campus system consisting of at least three campuses.

"Most who expressed an opinion seem to agree that UNMC (the University of Nebraska Medical Center) has achieved a degree of excellence in its targeted areas," Blank said.

He said although UNL should be considered the flagship campus, there is also disagreement as to what should be the true role of a flagship campus.

Where are we going?

Blank said most respondents agreed the objective of the NU system should be to develop excellence on each of the three NU campuses.

He said a number of respondents said an overall goal of the university should be the reduction of rivalries between campuses.

According to Blank, some of the areas that need to be addressed are: updating role and mission statements of each NU campus; clarifying the relationship between the board and the university president; and re-evaluating the function, efficiency and personnel of NU Central Administration.

Where should we be going?

Blank said there was general disagreement in the responses over the proper direction of the NU system.

"The majority indicated either the system itself needs only minor changes, or it 'ain't broke,'" Blank said.

What changes, if any, should be considered?

Blank said most of the responses indicate that, due to rapid changes in the future of higher education, it is not the time for a major overhaul of the NU system.

He said some responses also indicate a major overhaul would be harmful to the system.

"Most treated the admission of Kearney, at least for purposes of discussion, as a foregone conclusion," Blank said. "Most of those who stated an opinion expressed confidence in the current system and expressly stated or implied that the system would function adequately with the addition of Kearney."

What kind of individual do we need as president to lead us in the coming years?

"The answers to this question are, for the most part, predictable," Blank said. "The president must be well-regarded in academic circles and must be able to represent the university with internal and external constituencies."

He said respondents also indicated the president must be able to work with the board and state government, and must be able to develop and articulate clear goals and strategies for the university.

Blank said most respondents thought the president should not serve as a chancellor, and the relationship between the president and the regents should be clearly outlined.

Kozak, Valgora crowned queen, king of UNO's homecoming court

God save the queen (and king).

The coronation of homecoming royalty highlighted halftime activities during the UNO-St. Cloud State football game Saturday.

Melissa Kozak and Charles Valgora were chosen from six nominees to be the 1989 homecoming queen and king.

Paula Christensen, chairwoman of special events for the Student Programing Organization (SPO), said voter turnout consisted of roughly 1,200 faculty, staff and students.

Christensen would not release the percentage of votes received by each candidate. "That's not pertinent information. It's not fair to the other candidates who didn't win," she said. "It might make them feel bad."

Christensen said along with the six roses given to Kozak, the queen and king each received gift certificates from Grisanti's Casual Italian Restaurant and Caniglia's, and a gold bracelet from Greenberg's Jewelry. Both the queen and king were allowed to keep their crowns, she said.

The male runners-up each received a money clip and the female runners-up each received a necklace charm, she said.

The Confidentials played to about 100 people during the homecoming dance Friday night at the Midlands Community Center, Christensen said.

She said there wasn't any formal ceremony at the homecoming dance. But she said, "Once we introduced them (the candidates) we made them individually dance on the stage."

Although she said the coronation ceremony ran smoothly, Christensen said she would have liked to see more people attend the dance.

Student Government receives 'fair' rating

Here we go again. The Gateway's second survey sought campus input on Student Government. Of those who responded, 60 percent could not name their senate representative. However, an overwhelming majority, 80 percent, said they recognized the current student president/regent. Respondents had mixed feelings concerning student government's past performance. While most rated them "fair," the remainder were evenly split between "poor" and "failing" ratings.

Suggested improvements for Student Government also varied. Some said they would like to increase the senators' responsibilities in allocating funds, while others recommended eliminating the senate altogether. One respondent said Student Government is one way to explore the Congressional process. Others indicated they disliked some senators' "infantile bickering," "cliques" and "lack of authority." Eighty percent of the survey's five responses were from males.

Mavs home cooking broils NCC opponents

BY PAUL WILSON

After 16 consecutive road games, the Lady Maverick volleyball team returned to the friendly confines of the UNO Field House last weekend.

UNO, ranked No. 9 in Division II, began conference play Friday by defeating unranked St. Cloud State 15-6, 14-16, 15-5, 15-2. This effort was followed by a sweep of 14th-ranked Mankato State 15-7, 15-9, 15-11 Saturday.

UNO Coach Karen Uhler said she was pleased with the two wins.

"We're happy to be home," she said. "We'll take back-to-back wins anytime."

Friday's performance was led by junior middle-hitter Brenda Baumann and senior outside-hitter Amy Gradoville. Baumann and Gradoville each posted 15 kill-spikes.

Sophomore setter Jennifer Dickey added 50 set assists.

Uhler praised the team's aggressive offense.

"Baumann and Gradoville controlled the St. Cloud State game," she said. "They took advantage of most of the kill opportunities."

Saturday's victory saw freshman middle-blocker Melanie Marquis leading the team with 10 kill-spikes and Jennifer Dickey adding another 33 set assists to her weekend totals.

The two wins improved the Lady Mavs' record to 14-8.

Although Uhler praised the overall performance of the team, she said she was concerned about dropping one game to St. Cloud State.

"St. Cloud State never established dominant play early in the game, yet we allowed them to almost come back on us," she said. "We need to work on putting the game away and being consistently tough."

Uhler said she was especially happy with the win over Mankato State.

"I had a talk with the players after the St. Cloud State game," she said. "I thought we had been a little careless and I wanted to make sure the team concentrated on their next performance. They responded with a clean sweep of good Mankato State team."

Uhler said the team's service, which produced 10 service aces against St. Cloud State and six against Mankato State, was strong.

"Our services were sharp," Uhler said. "Jennifer Dickey's four service aces against St. Cloud State was impressive."

The team's tough schedule is starting to pay dividends, Uhler said.

"I've thought all along our tough schedule will pay off when it comes to conference play," Uhler said. "The wins over the weekend reflect this."

Gradoville said the Lady Mavs have recuperated from the last month's road trips.

"We had some tough games on the road," she said. "We were a little tired towards the end of the Central Missouri Challenge. It's great to be back at home and in winning stride."

The Lady Mavs will be on the road this weekend against Morningside and South Dakota. The next home game will be Oct. 20 against North Dakota at 7 p.m.

"I've thought all along our tough schedule will pay off when it comes to conference play. The wins over the weekend reflect this."

New shoes fit Baumann's strengths and experience

BY DAVID JAHR

Brenda Baumann is no ordinary UNO student.

At first glance she seems to fit the traditional student description. Baumann is a junior who came to UNO from York High School, and she is taking classes to fulfill her business major, carrying close to a 3.0 GPA.

But a closer look at this UNO volleyball player reveals a woman of strength, talent and dedication. Baumann walks with an energetic bounce, holding her head high looking through eyes which seem to see no limitations.

Going into UNO's North Central Conference opener against St. Cloud State Friday night, Baumann leads the Lady Mavs in attack-kill percentage, serving aces, blocks, assisted blocks and total games played.

UNO Coach Karen Uhler said Baumann is a potential All-American player.

Despite being a vital cog in the Lady Mav machine, three hours before the game Baumann says she feels little anxiety.

But that wasn't always the case.

"When I was a freshman I was very nervous. When games would come I would be afraid of making mistakes. But now I'm a lot more confident and I just go out and play and have fun."

Last year, the UNO volleyball team—including Baumann—was overshadowed by former All-American Ruth Evans. Evans' exit from the spotlight and collegiate volleyball left the middle-blocker position open. During the off-season, Uhler decided Baumann would fill Evans' shoes.

"At first I was a little hesitant because I wasn't sure if I wanted to switch, but now I like it a lot," Baumann said.

Baumann said her adjustment to the new position has been easier than expected because there is talent at every position.

"This year we have a well-rounded team. We have a bunch of good players and if we all go in and work hard, we'll win. Or we should win," she chuckled with an air of confidence.

In addition to the position change, Baumann had to make some social adjustments.

She comes from York, Neb., a town of 11,000 where "it doesn't have all the traffic."

"I used to think Omaha was this huge place where I'd never be able to find anything," she said. "Now it's just a regular town to me, it's like a second home."

If Baumann needs to return to her 'first home,' it's just 90 miles down Interstate 80.

"It's only an hour and a half drive, so if I need to get home just for a short time, I can zoom home real quick," she said.

On the court, Baumann says she is comfortable with her playing role with the Lady Mavs.

Baumann said she has the freedom to fully utilize her natural jumping ability in the middle-blocker position. As a high school high jumper, Baumann posted a 5-foot-9-inch jump, giving her second place in the state finals.

"I can jump pretty well so I can get on top of the ball and hit it pretty good," Baumann said.

As a middle blocker, most of the plays are designed around Baumann. When she leaps for a spike, she watches the ball, while keeping an eye on the defense.

"I can see in the air whether there is a hole in the block or not," Baumann said. "If I see there is only one blocker, I just hit it. If there is a couple of blockers then I try to hit away from them at the holes."

She said this awareness does not come naturally.

"It comes with playing more and more and being able to read the defenses you see. Experience helps," Baumann said.

Despite her success on the court, Baumann knows her game can always improve. While hitting is a strength, what is her weakness?

"Setting," Baumann said without hesitation. "Overhead passing has always been my weakness. But we've worked on it in the off season so it's a lot stronger than it ever has been."

Baumann said another skill has gone through a metamorphic change because of the hard work during off-season.

Baumann said her defensive skills—once a weakness—are now strengths.

"It's improved a lot, so I think it's becoming a good strength for me. A couple of years ago, I thought I could play defense, but I wasn't real consistent."

One of Baumann's other strengths is just that—her strength.

Early in the season, Baumann was selected to the NCAA All-American Strength Team, which is based on weight lifting improvements in one calendar year.

Baumann said collegiate athletics involve sacrifices other students don't have to make. In the last month, Baumann said the team has missed every Thursday and Friday class.

"Sometimes I can get real tired of the traveling," she said. "Once you get a break you just have to take advantage of it."

After the interview, Baumann said she was going home to relax for the Friday night's game.

Walking towards the parking lot, she is not a potential All-American middle blocker, but an ordinary student with ordinary problems.

"Now I just need to remember where I parked my car."

Badminton center might fly west

By JIM ANDERSON

Omaha is in jeopardy of losing its only tie to the Olympic Games.

The United States Badminton Association (USBA), which coordinates all U.S. Olympic badminton activities, is located in Papillion, Neb.

However, due to a lack of popularity and support, the badminton headquarters may move to the West Coast, USBA public relations director Bob Ericson said.

Ericson said a large community and financial effort is needed to keep the badminton headquarters in Papillion.

Alternative

SPORTS

Ericson believes the best way to develop community support is to show more people the game.

Badminton games consist of fifteen points, the best two out of three games wins. Players can only score on their serve.

Like tennis, badminton features doubles and singles play. The court is 20-feet wide for doubles and 17 for singles.

"Everyone scoffs at badminton but it's good healthy exercise. Whether your 10 years old or 85, you can still play at your own level," Ericson said.

Ericson said badminton points can last to up to 30 shots between players, which becomes exhausting.

"It's not just slam, bam, thank you ma'am and the point is over," he said.

"You have to be in fantastic shape to play at Olympic or world level, you have to be able to run, jump, twist and turn for an hour and a half a stretch."

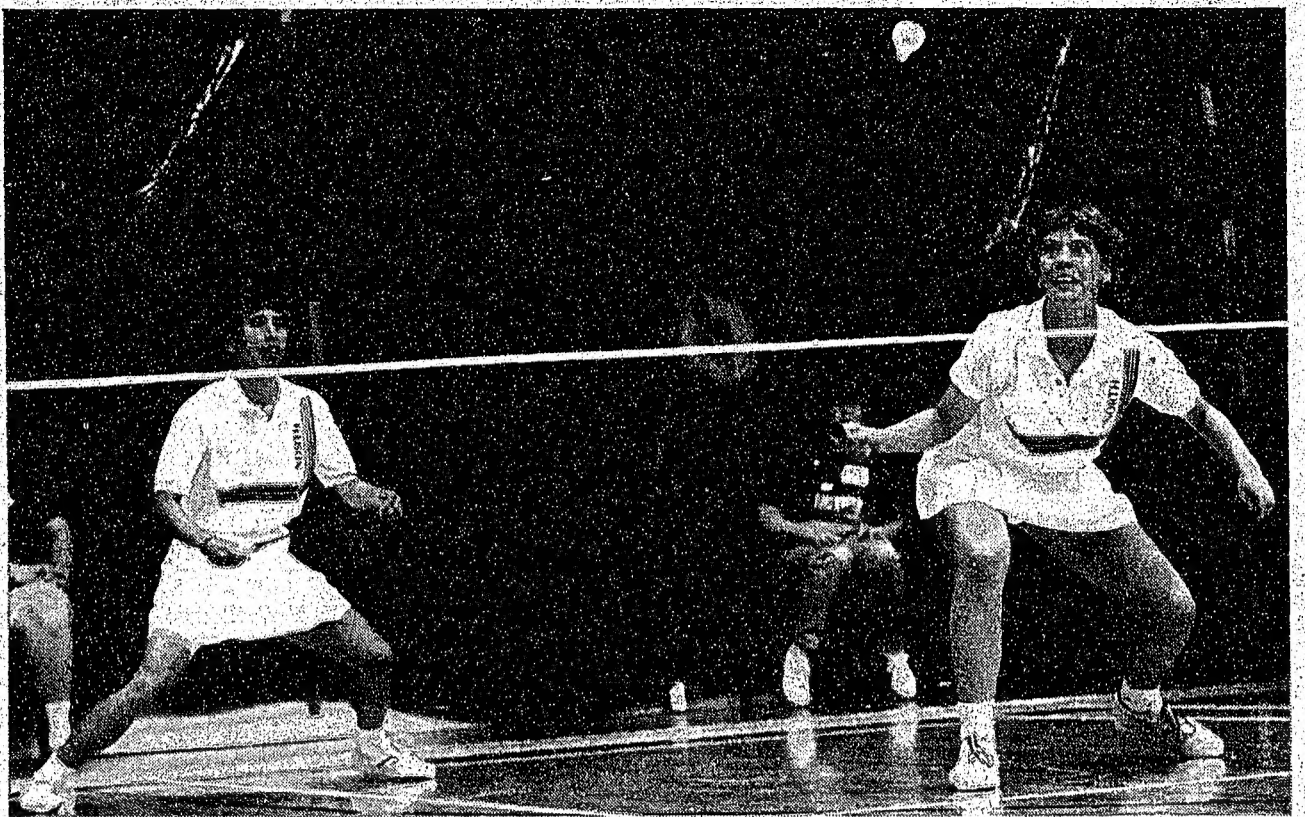

Ericson said badminton also involves strategy, with players attempting drop shots, various spins and smashes.

"Sometimes two players just smash the shuttlecock back and forth to each other at the net," Ericson said.

Unlike other sports, size is not a factor in badminton, Ericson said.

"You have to be able to run around a lot," Ericson said. "I would say 6-foot-4 and 240 pounds would be a disadvantage in badminton."

Ericson hopes city-wide activities also increases badminton fever in Omaha. Mayor P.J. Morgan has declared Oct. 9-

—Daryl Wilson

SWAT -- Meding Okieno (left) and Jay Kitzmiller batted the shuttlecock to a bronze medal in the 1989 Olympic Festival women's doubles badminton competition.

15 Badminton Week in Omaha.

Wednesday night, local sportscasters will play at the Mockingbird Recreational Center. Friday night, Miss Nebraska will play an exhibition match with the U.S. Olympic team's medal winners.

Saturday, the week culminates with the Ray Scott Open Badminton Tournament at Offutt Air Force Base from 9 to 10 p.m. The tournament will include participants from the Midwest as well as the four top men and women players in the nation.

"Right now we have no one around here that can beat these players," Ericson said. "Some might give them a run for their money but I don't see them beating them."

Exhibitions and demonstrations are also planned for several area schools, Ericson said.

Besides community support, Ericson said the USBA needs money, quick.

"We would like to have a big fund raiser or get some help from area corporations. So far we have met with negative results," he said.

The USBA's major drawback in Omaha is a lack of training facilities, Ericson said.

"We're going to need a facility built especially for badminton with 10-14 courts and a running track," Ericson said.

In addition to an arena, Ericson said the USBA needs locker rooms, office space, meeting rooms, trophy cases, a place to entertain visitors and a memorabilia display.

Ericson said he is trying to equal the enthusiasm in last July's Olympic Festival in Oklahoma City. In four days, 6,000 people watched badminton matches. The championship match drew a crowd of 1,000, Ericson said.

Badminton, a demonstration sport in the 1988 Summer Olympics and a full medal sport in the 1992 summer games, has caught on internationally, Ericson said. In fact, Ericson said badminton has become the No. 2 participant sport in the world, behind only soccer.

One reason for the lack of popularity in the United States is kids grow up playing mostly basketball and football, Ericson said.

"In the Malaysian countries, where the sport is booming, kids grow up with a racket in their hand — they start in grade school," he said.

St. Cloud State rains on Maverick homecoming

BY TONY FLOTT

Since St. Cloud State had a higher ranking than the UNO football team, the Huskies seemed to be a better team — on paper.

Saturday night the No. 14 ranked Huskies proved their ranking was justified and the statistics on paper don't lie, downing the No. 16 UNO 24-15 in a North Central Conference game.

"We just got whooped on both sides of the ball," captain and center Jim Olafson said in the Mavs' silent locker room.

"They were fast, they moved the ball on our defense, and offensively, they took us out of our game plan," Olafson said.

The Huskies were led by Harry Jackson, the NCC's all-time leading rusher, who piled up 152 yards on 28 carries.

On St. Cloud State's second possession of the game, the 210-pound Jackson ran around the right end for 60 yards, giving the Huskies a first and goal.

Defensive back Mark Priest made the saving tackle on Jackson, but on fourth down, Chad Mortensen scored from the one, giving the Huskies a lead they never relinquished.

"They dominated the game for basically three quarters and then our offense woke up, but it was too late," UNO Coach Sandy Buda said. The loss was Buda's 11th at home in 12 years at UNO.

The Huskies were able to add to their lead in the second quarter, when Jackson scored from the one-yard line, ending a drive that started on the their six.

The Huskies' quarterback, Stacy Jameson, was the key in the game, Buda said. Jameson, not Jackson, was the difference in the game, Buda said.

"The key was stopping Jameson and we didn't stop him," Buda said. "He made the big plays."

Jameson led the Huskies to 342 total yards on offense, 215 of them on the ground.

Going into the game, UNO had allowed a league-low 102.3 yards rushing and 233 total yards a game.

"Defensively, we just had trouble tackling and containing," Buda said.

However, it was the Mavs' offense that was dominated. The Huskies held UNO scoreless until the fourth quarter.

UNO's ground game, which had been averaging 235 yards, was limited to only 25.

"They didn't surprise us one bit. Whatever they ran, we knew where they were coming," Olafson said. "We just didn't handle them up front."

LaRon Henderson finished as the team's leading rusher with 19 yards, after starting in place of Bruce Martens, last week's NCC offensive Player-of-the-Week.

UNO avoided a shutout late in the fourth quarter, when quarterback Jim Burzinski took over for starter Paul Cech and sparked the offense for two touchdowns.

Cech, who had been playing with a badly bruised knee, was just a "little out of sync," Buda said.

"Jim's a good passer and so is Paul Cech," Buda said. "I just wanted to give him (Burzinski) a chance to get some playing time."

Before Burzinski started UNO's hurry-up offense, the Mavs had difficulty moving the ball.

"We had dropped balls, we had missed blocks and we had a couple of crucial penalties like we always seem to have," Olafson said.

"We threw everything at them," Buda said about his offense.

The loss drops UNO to 4-2 overall and 3-1 in the conference, putting them in a three-way tie for second.

"I guarantee you we're going to come back next week against North Dakota and get after it," Olafson said.

"Whoever gets on the bus Friday has got to be ready to play," Buda said. "And better than we played tonight."

Cavanaugh stresses accountability of representatives

By JULIE CONDON

"Will this class please come to attention," David Hinton said with a smile.

Hinton, dean of the College of Public Affairs and Community Service (CPACS), addressed UNO faculty and alumni during a luncheon Friday honoring 14 CPACS alumni.

"We wanted to extend a special honor to a few of our distinguished alumni," Hinton said.

The Alumni Association and UNO faculty from CPACS commended the recipients for their outstanding contributions to Nebraska.

Following the presentation of awards, former Nebraska Congressman John Cavanaugh discussed ethics in the public service.

Cavanaugh stressed the importance of communities demanding accountability from their representatives.

"In order for us to succeed and survive, we must be in a constant state of self-evaluation," he said. "When we look at the policy-making process, I think we have great cause for concern. I think it is crippling the way we make decisions."

Cavanaugh, referring to his visit to Rome, said the ancient ruins represent powerful democracy as well as decay.

"The forum is a very spiritual place," he said. "You get that sense of institution and at the same time, you're confronted with the decay."

Giving the example of the $150 million savings and loan bailout, Cavanaugh said there are major problems within public service that could be prevented.

"(The savings and loan bailout) is a public policy question never raised," he said. "And there's no accountability. There doesn't seem to be a relationship between the problems in our society and the institutions addressing those problems."

According to Cavanaugh, society should focus more on governing processes and institutions.

"The challenge for each of us as ethical people committed to serve in our community is to rise above to put more effort into our community," he said. "That's the challenge of any democratic society."

Cavanaugh ended his speech by commending CPACS for its contributions to society.

"When you look at the kind of people we have honored today, you have to be optimistic."
